

Global Week Fun Featured at MIT

By a Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor
Cambridge, Mass.

Fun, festivities, and information about foreign countries will dominate the scene at the second annual International Week at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, beginning today.

Recognizing that nearly 800 students from 71 nations are students at MIT—the largest ratio (12.5 per cent) of any college in the United States—MIT is presenting several activities to honor its students from abroad.

Occurring nearly every day through March 19, the events will begin tonight with an International Fiesta at the MIT Faculty Club.

Foreign students from MIT and Harvard form the activities committee, headed by Jaime de Sola, an MIT senior from Curacao, and have organized the program.

Fiesta Opens Week

The fiesta, one of the three events charging admission, is sponsored by the Club Latino, a group of students from Latin-American countries. A six-piece Latin band will play for dancing from 8 p.m. until midnight. Admission is five dollars a couple.

Tomorrow afternoon will be devoted to foreign sports—on exhibition at the Rockwell cage.

Japanese students will demonstrate judo and jujitsu, Britons will play cricket, and Indians will play their ancient game of kabaddi.

On Tuesday, March 15, the mood turns serious.

A panel of six men will discuss "Underdeveloped Countries—a Threat to World Peace?" To be held in the Compton Lecture Hall, it will begin at 8 p.m.

Staff Participation

Four of the six panelists are on the MIT staff. They are Dr. Max F. Millikan, professor of economics and director of the Center for International Studies; Dr. Leonardo Ricci, Bemis visiting professor of architecture; Dr. Paul N. Rosenstein-Rodan, professor of economics; and Dr. Walt W. Rostow, professor of economic history.

The other two men are Dr. Yves Rodrigues, Chargé de Mission of the Secretariat General of the French African Community; and Dr. Raymond J. Vernon, professor of international trade and investment, Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration.

Dr. Everett E. Hagan, professor of economics at MIT, will moderate the program.

Drawing from outside resources, the committee is presenting an African dance show by professional artists on Wednesday at 8 p.m. Staged in Kresge Auditorium, the show is another admission-charged event. Tickets will cost $1.

Travelogue Program

Thursday, March 17, is entitled International Movie Evening.

Beginning at 8 p.m. in Huntington Hall, the committee will present semitravelogues and experimental films of foreign make.

Next Saturday, March 19, 10 dance groups will demonstrate folk dances in Kresge Auditorium, beginning at 8:30 p.m. Admission, 75 cents.

Dancing in native costumes the performers will represent China, Scotland, the Ukraine, Spain, the Arab countries, the Latin-American countries, Israel, India, Lithuania, and the United States.

Exhibitions in the Hayden Library corridors tie in with the international theme. One displays handicrafts and pottery from the Middle East. The other is a display of books, stamps, and posters, marking International Week, 1960.

CPYRGHT